Despite the admission of liability in the case, however, Judge Dooling denied demurrage because Olson & Company, managing owners of the Bayard, had refused to charter another vessel, the Brazil, at Shipping Board rates, and the judge held that this fact signified that the Bayard also would have been idle even though undamaged. The decision should be of much interest to nations that were neutral during the war, belligerents not being concerned greatly, if at all. Judge Doolings decision follows in full: IN THE SOUTHERN DIVISION OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA, FIRST DIVISION, IN ADMIRALTY. Aktieselskapet Bonheur, a corporation, Libelant, vs. American Steamer Beaver, her tackle, etc., Respon-No. 16303 dent San Francisco & Portland Steamship Company, a corporation, Claimant. Nathan H. Frank, Esq., and Irving H. Frank, Esq., proctors for libelant. Farnham P. Griffiths, Esq., and McCutchen, Willard, Mannon and Greene, proctors for respondent and claimant. The Bayard and the Beaver collided in the harbor of San Francisco on November 3, 1917. The respondent Beaver admits liability for the collision and the only question left for determination is the question of damages. The cost of repairs to the Bayard must, of course, be allowed. The fact that other repairs, not necessitated by the collision, were made, but which did not delay the completion of repairs so necessitated, is, as I view the case, immaterial. The period covered by the making of the repairs was forty-eight days. It would, however, in any event have taken at least two weeks to have arranged for the acceptance by the owners of a charter satisfactory to the Shipping Board. The Brazil, a ship of the same general type a...
