

The Pacific School Journal, Vol. 9 : August 15, 1885 (Classic Reprint)

Albert Lyser

Excerpt from The Pacific School Journal, Vol. 9: August 15, 1885 Who shall ever be able to measure the influence of a really great teacher? Human knowledge hardly embraces a more fascinating field of inquiry than that which deals with the influence of great men upon schools of thought, literary, scientific, educational or ecclesiastical. The torch waved upon some sea-girt Iona wins answering ashes on broader mainlands. The inspiration of a strong man's honest work takes root and blossoms again in the most unexpected places. This is that sublime immortality of influence that George 12t desired. I know of no better example than that afforded by these famous men, Laboulaye.
